at the James Hardiman Library,
National University of Ireland, Galway

Opening the Past through Discovery and Scholarship

Archives are the precious and unique documented records of our history and culture. The Hardiman Library holds a range of archival collections, dating from the 15th century to present day across a range of disciplines and media, from manuscript, print, audio-visual to born-digital.

NUI Galway places a specific importance on the role of archives in teaching and research. These fascinating resources offer all users the raw materials necessary for ground-breaking research and discovery. The Hardiman Building offers a bespoke home and state-of-the-art environment for housing archives as well as a dedicated reading room and exhibition space.

Expert staff offer knowledge and skills in utilising archives to their full potential and work in partnership with users in realising their archival research.
